Do we really need another reality show starring Bobby Brown?

Are we ready for another "unscripted" demonstration of this man's life? Seriously?

Apparently BET is willing to take that risk. A new project starring the troubled New Edition singer and ex-husband of Whitney Houston is currently in the works. Sources say the new series will revolve around Brown's "life and businesses."

The project will be executive produced by James DuBose, who has developed several other celebrity-based reality shows for BET; including the high-profile series centered on Philadelphia Eagles star Michael Vick, who staged a comeback after being imprisoned for his involvement in a dog-fighting ring.

No other specifics on the Brown project, including the title, air dates or the number of episodes, were available.

Brown recently checked himself out of rehab following a three week stay. His wife, Alicia Etheredge-Brown, has been in the news after being hospitalized for seizures.
