

Magic Offers $1 Million if LeBron Enters NBA slam Dunk Contest

Written by Admin

Wednesday, 06 March 2013 00:00

Magic wants to see it very, very badly and so do we. In fact, Mr. Johnson is putting his money where his mouth is. Ok, were talking about LeBron James and how he straight up taunts NBA fans with his off-the-hook pre-game and in-game dunks.

But for whatever reason, he's never entered the NBA All-Star slam dunk contest. But if Magic Johnson has his way, fans just may be in luck. Just maybe. You see, Magic has upped the ante and offered a $1 million prize if James participates. "Please, LeBron, get in the dunk contest," Johnson said. "I'm going to put up a million dollars. A million dollars from Magic to LeBron. Please get in the dunk contest. I go every year. I want to see you out there. A million to the winner."

'SNL' Ratings Inch Up with Kevin Hart

After "Saturday Night Live" ratings took a dip with host Christoph Waltz several weeks ago, the NBC series rebounded over the weekend with host Kevin Hart and musical guest Macklemore & Ryan Lewis.

In the 25 markets with Local People Meters, the episode averaged a 2.8 rating, 13 share in adults 18-49. "SNL" delivered the top rating of the night among ABC, CBS, NBC and FOX in the Local People Meters, more than doubling all primetime programming on those networks.

In the Local People Meters, "Saturday Night Live" scored its highest 18-49 rating since the Adam Levine/Kendrick Lamar broadcast on Jan. 26, and matched the show's highest Local People Meter rating since Nov. 3, with host Louis C.K. and musical guest fun.