“It doesn’t matter what type of song you perform. What matters is the message.” These are wise words from vocal artist Vincent Powell, who had the opportunity to share his message of love to millions people this year with the platform of American Idol. Though Vincent was not crowned the victor, the Houston native still made quite the impact drawing responses from celebrity judges like “that hit me somewhere,” “finally,” and “the show started right here.” With comments like that as well as Vincent’s vocal ability and drive, you know that we certainly haven’t seen the last of him yet.

Having been a part of a very musical family, Vincent fell in love with music at a very young age. He recalled moments of sitting around the piano singing songs in harmony with his family as well as his very first public singing experience with Chester D.T. Baldwin which involved some chewing gum and the restarting of the song.

June marked Vincent’s fourth year as a worship leader at Fallbrook church. He wholeheartedly believes in God, but don’t let his Gospel roots fool you. Vincent has made it clear that he wants to reach as many people as he can through his craft and will not limit himself solely to Gospel music.
