The Houston Texans look to build off of the momentum they had from OTAs going into mini camp. Mini camp was held this week for three days and gave coaches a chance to get another look into their team before training camp.

Last season, the Texans didn't have much trouble scoring points from the red zone — they scored in some way nearly every time. What was more of an issue was scoring touchdowns rather than field goals. That's an area of emphasis for the Texans this offseason, and the additions of Greg Jones and rookie receiver DeAndre Hopkins could help in that respect.

"They got a great running game, a great O-line, a great blocking scheme and the two backs they have do a phenomenal job," Jones said. "I'm just trying to come here and when we get down to the red zone, I want to gain yards and score some points."

Speaking of the offensive line, Andrew Gardner has been trying to gain some footing in the NFL for the last four years. He is getting the chance to show the Texans what he can do as the starting left tackle. All-Pro tackle Duane Brown will miss about a month after having a bone spur shaved from his foot last Wednesday.
